New Health Care Reform: the Effects on Us

Guest Speaker: Dr. Mei Zhao is currently an Associate Professor at the University of North Florida's (UNF) Brooks College of Health where she teaches in the Department of Public Health's Health Administration Programs. She received her Ph.D. in health administration from Virginia Commonwealth University and her Master in health administration from Shandong University, Jinan, China. Her teaching areas include health economics, quantitative analysis in health care, health care finance, quality management in health care, and US health care system. Dr. Zhao has participated in several research initiatives, including studies of financial pressures affecting hospital quality of care and health promotion and disease prevention services in rural hospitals. She has been the principal investigator for a multi-year grant from the College of Health Brooks Research Grants in which her research team examined organizational and financial influences on multi-dimensional aspects of nursing home quality of care. She is also the principal investigator for the funded research examining the complementary and alternative medicine (CAM) and the prevalence of Western Medicine in China rehabilitation services. She has published widely in numerous journals including Inquiry, Health Policy, Health Care Management Review, Journal of Health and Human Services Administration, and Chinese Health Service Administration. Over the last six years at UNF, she has helped establish several international exchange programs with Chinese Universities and government agencies. Dr. Zhao won the Outstanding International Leadership award due to her great contribution to propelling the University toward internationalization in spring 2009.
